Sir George Parkin's Estate.

LONDON, Eng., Aug. 14.—An estate of £6,000 was left by Sir George Parkin, organizing representative of the Rhodes Scholarship trust for twenty years, who died a few weeks ago. He was a native of Canada and before coming to England in 1902 he was principal of Upper Canada College, Toronto.

To Set Farm Hours.

LONDON, Eng., Aug. 14. — The Hague International Court of Justice by a majority has decided affirmatively the question submitted by France rising out of the long controversy at the International Labor Conference at Geneva last October as to whether the international labor organization of the League of Nations was competent to regulate internationally the hours and other conditions affecting agricultural workers. The French and Roumanian judges dissented.

The Hague court decided that the labor organization was not competent to scrutinize the means of production.

ADOLPHUSTOWN

The terrible storm of wind, rain and hail, which swept over this district Monday of last week did hundreds of dollars of damage. Corn and late grain was badly flattened, several silos are down, innumerable trees broken and blown to the roots, and telephone poles and wires broken on all lines.

The meeting of the Quarterly Board and Ladies' Aid tea held in the Methodist church on Monday evening of last week was well attended.

The lawn social held on Mr. Bygott's lawn on Tuesday night was a fine success in spite of the cool weather, but everyone was much disappointed that the orchestra from Glen Island failed to arrive. Their motor boat refused to work and they spent the evening on the bay.

Mrs. Hawley, accompanied by her sister, Mrs. Ferguson, Saskatoon, is holidaying at Thousand Island Park.

Miss Edna Magee underwent an operation on her throat in Kingston general hospital last week, and is progressing nicely.

DENBIGH

Rev. C. F. Christianson satisfactorily enjoyed his vacation among his former parishioners here and has returned to Toronto, his present field of labor, but Mrs. Christianson and children left for Pembroke, where they intend to visit some relatives yet before they return to their city home.

Mr. and Mrs. J. Varney and daughter motored from Buffalo, N. Y., here and enjoyed a pleasant week's visit with her parents and other relatives. On their returning they were accompanied by her father, Mr. E. Marquardt, and her sister, Miss Kate Marquardt, who intend to enjoy a couple of weeks visiting in the U. S.

Other recent visitors who have returned to their present places of residence are: Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Chatson and Geo. Fritsch, of Renfrew; Mr. and Mrs. F. Ladyshin, of Brockville; Mr. and Mrs. A. Chatson, of Timins, New Ontario; and Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Bolton, of Cloyne.

Recently arrived visitors here are: at F. Falk's, their daughters, Hulda, Emma, and Mina, of Napanee; at R. Meigh's, their daughter, Annie, from Ottawa; at H. Glasers, Mr. and Mrs. Winklaeser, of Sault Ste. Marie; at Chas. Falk's, their daughter, Mrs. J. Clark and children from Huntsville; and at A. Lockwood's, Mr. Stanley Lockwood, of Renfrew.

Miss Flora Fritsch is away on a visit to her sister, Mrs. J. Wise, at Cataraqui.

Mr. and Mrs. P. Stein, and H. Warlich, spent last week-end and Monday at Hardwood Lake, visiting relatives and friends, and attending some missionary services conducted by Revs. M. Hamm, of Ladysmith, and C. Blohm, of Palmer Rapids.

Wolves have committed some depredations among the sheep in the pasture fields of several farmers in this vicinity, and Mr. Herb. Fritsch had ten sheep killed by fighting, which, during a heavy thunder storm, had sought shelter under a large tree, which was struck.

The students of our Continuation School during the last term are greatly pleased with the result of the last examination, at which all of the eighteen passed creditably.

DESERONTO

The second open air concert under the auspices of the returned soldiers' club was held in the park on Thursday evening last. A good programme was given and a refreshment booth was on the grounds. Blads's orchestra, of Napanee, provided the music.

The Methodist Sunday school picnic, held Wednesday afternoon at Glen Island, was a great success. The pretty yacht, Quinte Lady, had to make several trips to accommodate the many who went over.

Preparations for a big celebration here on Labor Day are well under way. There will be baseball and lacrosse, also a five-mile race.

Misses Bessie and Phoebe Doxsee, Toronto, are at Ernie Vanalstine's.

Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Ward and baby, Montreal, at W. H. Henderson's, Dundas street. From here they go to Fremont Park to their summer cottage for a two weeks' vacation. They will also visit friends at Gananoque.

Miss Irene Hearns, Toronto, is home for a holiday.

Miss Ella Nash, Kingston, is also under the parental roof.

Mrs. Walter Wilson, Toronto, is with Mr. and Mrs. W. O. Ravin.

Thomas Fitzgerald, farmer and cattle buyer, motored thro the reserve one day last week.

W. H. Henderson and Miss Vallentine with other friends, motored to Kingston one day recently.

Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Cassels and Miss Pearl, Kingston, were in town last Wednesday.

An article was noticed in the Kingston Whig which a farmer in that district had 100 tons of hay in his barns, and expected to thresh 1,000 bushels of grain. That sounds very good, but a farmer in Tyendinaga Reserve has 147 tons of hay in his barns and expects to thresh 4,000 bushels of grain.

A number of the younger set enjoyed a very jolly corn roast and dance on the law last Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Naylor's one evening last week.

PARLIAMENTARY LETTER

The people of South Essex extended a warm welcome to the Prime Minister, Rt. Hon. MacKenzie King, when the latter addressed them at the annual picnic of the South Essex Liberal Association and laid before them what had been done by his government during the months it had held office, and what his government was striving to do in the immediate future. The Premier, and also Hon. Geo. P. Graham, member for South Essex, and Minister of National Defence, and Fernand Rinfret, member for St. James Division, of Montreal, were greeted by a crowd of over 2,000 Liberals when they arrived at Leamington and the Prime Minister was in good form when he rose to address the large audience. Before the picnic the visitors, with Senator McCoig, were tendered a reception by the Leamington Board of Trade, and at night they were guests of honor at a banquet given at Kingsville. It was a big day for South Essex.

One of the important announcements of the Prime Minister was that the Board of Management of the Canadian National Railways would be appointed at an early date. Dealing with the personnel of that Board the Premier stated that the first qualification of men to be chosen would be that they were not engaged in any business selling supplies to the railways. In previous speeches by himself and other members of the present government party, it will be remembered that it was pointed out that the old board was composed of men who were connected with industries nearly all of which were selling different materials to the railways or the steamship companies which those gentlemen had been by the Conservative government to direct. The government, Mr. King stated, had decided to take the railways entirely out of politics, and the first step was change of management, so that the whole system would have uniformity of administration.

The men who were to form the new board must have no private interests in any way connected with the sale of materials used by the railways in any way. Blads would depend upon the choice of a chairman who must be a railway man of experience. He must [illegible] to the government railway system. That the government was not allowing itself to be hampered by any narrow localism in choosing such a man was indicated by the Prime Minister when he said that "to get such a man with the experience and ability necessary the government might have to look elsewhere," but he believed the people would approve the government's course in getting a man of the type required.

Mr. King also intimated that Canada was prepared to consider reciprocity with the United States at any time the government at Washington made the overture, in this point he said there could be no doubt that the Progressive movement in Western Canada owes its origin to the defeat of reciprocity in 1911. That the week more perhaps than any other part of the Dominion had suffered from the low of wheat markets, which the defeat of that policy had rendered inevitable. All parts of the country have suffered and are suffering through the mistake made in 1911. There is only one way to seek to retrieve defeat or undo error, and that is to travel through the ground that has been lost. It was this motive which led Hon. Mr. Fielding to visit Washington almost immediately after the formation of the government. It was obvious, in the interests of all that our friends to the south should be made aware of the significance of the changing of government in Canada, and should know that we are fairly willing to co-operate with them at any time on matters of mutual concern and that if through a course of action on their part which might seem prejudicial to our interests we were obliged to seek markets elsewhere in other directions, it was due to no lack of neighborliness or neighborly feeling in our part.

The Premier stated theat when his government was returned to power his first thought was to restore the representative character of the administration, which had become non-representative under Sir Robert Borden and Rt. Hon. Arthur Meighen. The late government, when it went out of office, had three of its important cabinet ministers, the minister of soldiers civil re-establishment, the minister of labor and postmaster general in the senate, where they were not representative of the people.

This condition he had changed. He also had the task of making the government properly representative of the various sections of the country which was a more difficult task. The result of the election was to produce, with the exception of New Brunswick and British Columbia, an almost solid Liberal east and a Progressive west with the forces in Ontario divided. If his friends of the Liberal east had desired to show resentment to the Progressives, they had the opportunity, but there was no such spirit, and the inclusion in the cabinet of Hon. Messrs. Motherwell and Stewart was, he thought, a guarantee that the interests of the West would be well looked after. He admitted that in forming his cabinet he made overtures to the Progressives and offered them representation therein, but at that time they did not feel inclined to accept the offer. However, there was no hostility between the Liberals and Progressives; on the contrary, the attitude of the Progressive members had been one of cordial co-operation all through the session, and he felt that the close of the session found the government more strongly established in the Progressive confidence.

"I never favored a coalition," said the Premier in referring to the offer made to the Progressives, "but I felt that the west should be represented and therefore; I offered them seats in the cabinet."

The broad-mindedness and tolerance of the province of Quebec had been illustrated by the election of Hon. Mr. Stewart by acclamation in Argenteuil.

From a representative standpoint he thought the present government would be found to compare favorably with any in the past. The government's policy, he claimed, had always been to get in accordance with the wish of the people and he frankly admitted that on matters where we had been in doubt as to their position they got the public attitude first before they acted. No taunts or jeers from the opposition could cause the government to change their policy in this regard. The past session had done much to demonstrate that third parties were a production of Toryism.

"Much has been said of recent years of third parties and their place in the politics of our country," said Mr. King. "I believe the session of parliament just concluded has gone far to demonstrate a truth that is outstanding in our political history, namely, that third parties come into being under very rare and malodministration, but that the necessity for them vanishes under liberal administration. There was no third party in the days of Alexander Mackenzie; there was no third party in the days of Laurier. It was under Sir John MacDonald, Sir Robert Borden and Mr. Meighen that third parties, either as Patrons of Industry or Grangers, United Farmers, Grain Growers or Progressives, came into evidence in the federal arena.

"The sequence in most cases is wholly natural. Toryism is sure to breed discontent, and discontent always gives birth to some new and first ultra-radical organization. Liberalism, if true to itself, will seek out the causes of discontent, and endeavour to remove them, and thus going to the root and the source of the trouble will seek to remove the division that exists between forces that ought to be united.

It is with this spirit and with this larger aim in view that the present Liberal administration was deliberately sought for and as adequately deliberately sought to remove the cause of political unrest which have brought into power as an entity distinct from Liberal that large body of opinion that describes itself as a Progressive, but which, if the words have any meaning at all, are alternative expressions for one and the same attitude.

"We need to split the forces of democracy and it was a mistake to have them divided, for I want to see Toryism always where it is now, the opposition and the forces of democracy enthroned in power," he said.

Mr. King declared that when the Liberal government found that Canadian cattle were shut out of the United States market they went to work to secure the removal of the embargo imposed by the British government and he believed their efforts in this line would soon be successful. Negotiations had also been opened looking to the transportation to provinces of the control of their natural resources. These had been interrupted and would soon be resumed.

MAY GRANT MORATORIUM.

Great Britain Working For the Peace of Europe.

LONDON, Aug. 14.—Germany will be informed at once to withhold the reparations payment due next Tuesday until a decision of the Reichstag has been reached and transmitted to her by the reparations committee.

This is the immediate result of the deadlock, which still exists in the conference here, it is said, in both British and French quarters. The decision of the Reichstag has been notified to hold up, but which she has declared her intention not to pay, amounts to 2,000,000 gold marks, according to the French. The instructions covering this delay have already been sent to the reparation commission.

While conference circles it is agreed the two chief differences between the British and French are: first, the proposal for control of German state mines and forests, on which only Belgium supports France; second, over the length of the moratorium after the present year.

The French complain that article 10 of the British proposals, the one clause in the memorandum, is entirely too vague as to the length of the moratorium. This clause contains a suggestion for raising an international loan, based on the 26 per cent. tax on German exports.

According to French officials this clause may be interpreted as meaning that if such a loan succeeds in raising a fair amount of cash, the moratorium might be continued indefinitely.

The British are the source for the statement that the French have agreed that if there is a moratorium it will include German private debt payments.

They Want what they read about

The standards of living for the average family in Canada grow higher each year. The luxuries of yesterday are the necessities of to-day. People in the smaller towns and on farms want the newer things they read about.

Dry Goods Stores, Grocers, Shoe, Hardware and Paint Stores, in the smaller towns, all find they can show the newest things by carrying small stocks of them and re-ordering by Long Distance. The jobber or manufacturer's warehouse is at their elbow — their order departments are alert for telephone trade!

Shipments are often made the same day. Up-to-dateness of merchandise is no longer confined to the big city stores — and large sums are not locked up in stock.

Try it. Have a big store in a small town. "Use the Bell to Sell" — and to Buy.

Oysters and Pearls.

For centuries the Chinese have acted upon the knowledge that a pearl is a disease of the oyster, but so far they have been able to produce nothing but mother-of-pearl. An English scientist is experimenting now on one of the Poumotu Islands, the most famous pearl fisheries of the world. In "The Cruise of the Dream Ship" Mr. Ralph Stock describes what has been accomplished so far in these experiments. He takes an oyster from the lagoon, opens it carefully, and places a pilule of beeswax against the main muscle. The mantle of the oyster then covers it with mother-of-pearl and in the course of a few months there forms a blister, or a fair imitation of a half-pearl. But the real pearl comes from the flesh of the oyster, and in order to produce a genuine pearl the scientist breeds oysters on the lagoon, dissects them under the microscope for signs of the parasite that undoubtedly causes the pearl, and injects into their flesh all manner of foreign matter.

THE FARM LOAN SYSTEM

SHORT TERM CREDITS

By H. B. ROADHOUSE

There is one distinctive difference between the system of long-term loans and the system of short-term loans recently inaugurated in this Province. Those who have followed the preceding articles in this brief series, will have observed that long term loans are made direct by the Agricultural Development Board at 5 Queen's Park, Toronto. In contrast to this, no short-term loans are made by the Board, but made solely through local associations organized for the purpose.

The reason for this difference in method of operation lies in the difference in the nature of the security and the nature of the loan. In the matter of long-term loans, the security is a first mortgage on land, and the personality of the borrower, while important, is secondary. In the short-term loans, the security is a note for lien on chattels, and the personality of the borrower and his reputation in the community, is one of the big determining factors. Then, too, the loan is usually a small one, with $2000 as the maximum, the average loan will no doubt be a good deal under $1,000. It would therefore be physically impossible for any central office to grant and supervise loans in all the different sections of the Province for small amounts. No system of granting of short-term loans on personal or chattel security by a central office for a whole Province, has ever been attempted, as far as I am aware. Such loans may, however, be granted with reasonable safety by local committees familiar with all the circumstances.

NOT SO DIFFICULT

Accordingly, a plan of organization of local farm loan associations has been devised, and this is not so difficult as might at first appear. A membership of five is required, and each member must take one share of stock, value $100, and make a payment of 10 per cent., or $10. This stock represents capital, and is held in reserve. There is little likelihood of any further payment ever being required on capital account. After the necessary membership is signed up, the township council and the Government are each asked to appoint two directors, and subscribe for one-half the amount of stock subscribed by local members; this to be added to the reserve. When these directors, constitute a board of seven, which, thereafter, looks after the business of the association. A secretary-treasurer is appointed, and he is the only paid officer permitted. When the association is thus formed it continues from year to year with the usual annual election of officers, and applications for loans can then be made from time to time. The secretary-treasurer, who will arrange to have them considered by the directors.

In practice, it will probably be found desirable to have meetings at stated periods for the consideration of the loans. In this way loans may be passed without any inconvenience either to the borrower or to the directors.

ASSOCIATIONS FORMED

Although this plan has only been before the farmers of this Province for a few months, ten associations have been formed, and are doing business, but have not yet passed on loans. The associations which have been formed and have passed loans are as follows: Nassagaweya Farm Loan Association, Halton County, $12,700; Sault Ste. Marie Farm Loan Association, $2,920; Glanford Farm Loan Association, Wentworth County, $3,200; Saugeen Farm Loan Association, Halton County, $4,050; Elkrid Farm Loan Association, Middlesex Co., $3,775; Howard Farm Loan Association, Kent County, $1,025; Balfour and Rayside Farm Loan Association, Sudbury District, $3,000; Rockton Farm Loan Association, Stormont Co., $3,800; Esquesing Farm Loan Association, Halton County, $6,000.

The following associations have completed organization, but have not passed any loans as yet: Toronto Township, Peel County; Albion Association, Peel County; Seneca Township Farm Loan Association, Haldimand County.

WHY AMOUNTS ARE SMALL

It will be noted that the aggregate amounts loaned to each association are not as large as might have been expected. The explanation is that the Board of Directors of the associations were organized late in the season, and, consequently, members had made the arrangements for spring financing gone ahead without. They preferred, however, to complete the organization so that the association will be at their service later in the year and in other years.

Loans granted ranging from $1,025 to $4,800, in the summer years, and are for all manner of purposes in connection with farm work. They are repayable at the end of the given term, and at 6½ per cent., but, of course, may be renewed for another year if the directors feel that such renewal is justified.

Each applicant submits to the association a detailed statement of his assets and liabilities, and also signs a promisory note, an application is then endorsed by the president and secretary of the association and sent to the Board for approval and for issuing of cheque to cover the total amount loaned to an association. While, therefore, the subject is approached from the standpoint of helping the man on the land in carrying out his farming operations, it will be seen that due regard is paid to the question of security, and if reasonable discretion is exercised there is no reason why any of the money so loaned should go astray.

WELL DISTRIBUTED

The number of associations now doing business is regarded as a very satisfactory start. With the new system it was not expected that such associations would spring up in a night all over the Province, nor was it regarded as desirable that such should occur. A glance at the list given will reveal the fact that the associations now in existence are well scattered over the Province. East, Centre, West and North are all represented in the locations given. Not only is this a fact, but the Board of Directors selected includes some of the very best farmers in the Province. Their interest in the matter and their public-spirited efforts to assist their neighbors in the matter of finance gives the associations organized a good standing in their respective communities.

AS TO THE FUTURE

The future of this plan is now in the hands of the farmers themselves. It was placed on the Statute Books as an alternative system of merit in itself, and of value as an alternative where other agencies were found inadequate or unsatisfactory. The Agricultural Development Board will assist in any section where there is a desire to organize an association, and will also keep in touch with the work of each association in the interests of the members and the interests of the Province.

HEALTH OF DAIRY CATTLE

How it can be obtained and also Maintained.

If dairymen in particular, and farmers generally, would know how to have healthy cattle, they should lose no time in sending to the Publication Branch, Ottawa, for a copy of recently issued Phamplet No. 16, of the Dominion Department of Agriculture, prepared under the immediate supervision of the Veterinary Director General. It contains 85 definite questions and 85 explicit answers, couched in plain, straightforward language, regarding the Accredited Herd system and the identification, prevention and eradication of tuberculosis; also relative to the requirements of and provisions for official inspecting and testing. The primary principle for the prevention of tuberculosis, or for that matter, any other disease of live stock, is cleanliness, accompanied by free ventilation and plenty of light; and the first element in sanitation is cleanliness. That this is a prime consideration is indicated by the statement that the officially appointed inspector of the district is to visit a herd for tuberculosis until he is assured by personal observation that the premises are clean and sanitary. Besides details of the provisions made for Government testing, explanations are given in the question and answer form regarding the testing and the classification of dairies, testing by private practitioners with departmentally supplied tuberculin, and the ways in which swine and poultry are liable to become infected with tuberculosis.

Issued by the Director of Publicity, Dominion Department of Agriculture, Ottawa, August 3rd, 1922.

First Nurse In History.

The word "nurse" is derived from the Latin, and means "to nourish."

There is no reference to a sick nurse in the Bible, although two curious children's nurses are mentioned.

Fabiola, the first nurse recorded in history, was a Roman woman who established a hospital and convalescent home for the poor after her conversion to Christianity, about A. D. 380. She inaugurated a society of rich women, and had them trained as sick nurses.

Nurses, who are addressed as "sister" on account of the old religious associations with their work, lost their professional dignity in 1544, when twelve women were engaged at St. Bartholomew's Hospital to nurse the sick and perform menial work.

From that time nurses were untrained, until the doctors at the New York Hospital began to lecture them on "scientific cleanness" in 1790.

Fliedner, at Kaiserwerth, Germany, opened the first scientific training school for nurses in 1836. Florence Nightingale was trained at his establishment, and introduced his methods into this country.

New Gulf Stream Mystery.

Recent investigations in Britain in connection with the herring industry have disclosed the fact that the Atlantic is invading the North Sea. Working from Lowestoft up the coast roughly to Scarborough, and thence on a course straight across the sea to Denmark, a series of the biggest the scientists took at intervals of 20 miles samples of the water layers from the surface to the bottom, and found that there was a quite abnormally large amount of Atlantic water in the deeper parts of the sea, and at the same time an unusual degree of incoming water, which is ascribed to the very low rainfall. Atlantic water is detected by its high degree of salinity, its temperature, and the constitution of its plankton, which is the minute life, animal and vegetable, that forms the food of fishes. The cause of this huge inflow of Atlantic water is not known. The scientists have no doubt that the herrings have been affected in some way by the phenomenon. But what has happened to the herrings in certain parts of the North Sea has not yet been discovered.

Insects Are Good Architects

In looking at our modern apartment houses, with all of their improvements for ventilation and even temperature, we are given a surprise when we see that the white ants or termites have enjoyed these advantages for no one knows how long. The audacity and vastness of the labor undertaken by these insects, and the ingenious foresight by which they insure to their delicate larvae a comfortable youth, are startling. As architects, these insects show themselves superior to man, taking into consideration his enormous size compared to theirs, in the art of building. Pillars, cupolas, vaults, nothing is too difficult for these small and patient laborers.

The different species of termite are not equally industrious. The species called bellicosus seems to have carried the art of construction to the highest point. All the individuals of the species are not alike; there exists a polymorphism which produces creatures of three sorts: First, the soldiers, recognized by their large heads and long, sharp mandibles, moved by powerful muscles. It is their mission to defend the whole colony against its adversaries, and the wounds they can produce, fatal to creatures of their own size, are painful even to man. The second class are the workers, who labor as navvies and architects, and take charge of the pupae. They form the great majority of the colony. The third class is composed of but two, the king and queen. To each nest there is usually only a single fertile and lazy couple. These two personages do absolutely nothing; the soldiers and workers care for them and bring them food. They have possessed wings, but these fall off.

The lofty nest constitutes a hillock in the form of a cupola. The interior arrangement is very complicated and at the same time very well adapted to the life of the inhabitants. There are four stories in all, covered by the general exterior walls. The walls of the dome are very thick and at the base they measure from sixty to eighty centimeters. The clay in drying attains the hardness of brick. The walls of this enceinte are hollowed by galleries of two kinds. One is horizontal and gives access from outside to all the stories, and the others mount spirally in the thickness of the wall to the summit of the dome. When the colony is in full activity after the construction is completed, these little passages are of no further use. They serve for the passage of the masons when building the cupola, and they may be utilized again if a breach should be made in the wall. At the outset these galleries in the wall are very wide, and they sink into the earth beneath the palace to a depth of more than a yard and a half.

These subterranean passages are the catacombs of the termites, and have a very close analogy with those of old and populous human cities. Their origin is similar; they are ancient quarries. The insects hollowed out the material necessary clay for their labors.

Such is the external wall within which a busy population swarms. On passing to the interior we first enter the ground floor. In the center is found the royal chamber. The walls are extremely strong and are supplied with windows for ventilation, and with doors to enable the termites to render their services. It is necessary to renew the air in the chamber, which constantly contains more than 2,000 insects. The openings are large enough for the passage of the workers, but the queen cannot pass through them. She is, therefore, a prisoner, as immured as a goddess in her temple. The chain which holds her is the prodigious development of her abdomen. As a virgin she could enter, when fertilized she cannot henceforth go out. She continuously elaborates eggs; every moment one appears. The king remains near her, to give his assistance when occasion arises, but the queen received the title, absolutely justified under the circumstances, of father of the people. Around the couple zealous attendants crowd. There are about 2,000 of them, workers and soldiers, keeping them free from dust and bringing them food. As soon as the queen lays an egg, one of the workers hastens to take it gently between its jaws; it is the property of the state, and is carefully carried off to the second floor, where the state nursery is situated.

The center of the ground floor, therefore, is occupied by the royal chamber. Above this floor rests a thick vault of clay, which forms a strong floor for the first story. This is composed of only a single room, useless except to isolate and support the apartments of the second floor. The second story rests on the first. It is this that the eggs are brought, and here the larvae go through their evolution. Partitions of clay divide the space into a few large halls, and these are again subdivided, this time not by earth, but by materials of a more delicate nature, which are, moreover, the best conductors of heat. It is a question, in fact, of maintaining these little chambers at an almost even temperature, favorable for the development of the eggs.

The arrangement of the top story is also disposed with a view of protecting the young who are the future of the community. It contains the attic, situated just beneath the cupola, and contains absolutely nothing; it simply serves to interpose beneath the summit of the edifice and the story below a layer of air, which is a bad conductor of heat. The chamber devoted to the young, which is placed between two gaseous layers, a precaution which, combined with the choice of materials, places it in the very best conditions for protection against the alteration of cold at night and the torrid heat of midday.

The First Medical School.

According to Greek legend, the founder of the first medical school was Chiron, the centaur. Aesculapius was the only one of his many pupils that equalled the master. He studied the curative properties of plants and the treatment of diseases and wounds. If we can believe Homer, the two sons of Aesculapius, Machaon and Podalyre, organized the first army medical corps, which functioned during the siege of Troy. Greeces made demi-gods of her scientists and doctors, and the Iliad remarks that a physician "is worth many men."

COUNTY OF LENNOX AND ADDINGTON

TREASURER'S SALE OF LANDS FOR TAXES

County of Lennox and Addington,
To Wit:

By virtue of a warrant under the hand of the Warden and seal of the County of Lennox and Addington, bearing date the Tenth Day of July, A.D., 1922, and to me directed, commanding me to levy upon the lands mentioned in the following list for arrears of taxes due thereon, and the costs as therein set forth.

I HEREBY GIVE NOTICE that unless the said arrears and costs are sooner paid, I shall proceed to sell the said lands, or so much thereof as may be necessary for the aforesaid taxes and costs, at the Court House, in the Town of Napanee, on WEDNESDAY, the 25th DAY OF OCTOBER, A.D., 1922, beginning at the hour of ten o'clock in the forenoon, and in compliance with the Assessment Act.

Should any of the aforementioned lands remain unsold they will be again offered at an adjourned sale to be held on Wednesday, the 22nd day of November, for any price they will bring. The municipalities directly concerned give notice of their intention to purchase, if taxes are not fully covered, or for any sum they may determine advisable.

The public will please remember that this is a strictly CASH sale. Private cheques will not be accepted unless MARKED by the bank upon which they are drawn and must be at par here.

Non-patented, or any lands in which the Crown has an interest will be sold subject to those provisions.

W. J. SHANNON,
Treasurer of the County of Lennox and Adington.

Dated at Napanee this 10th day of July, 1922.

Rattlesnake Pie.

In Europe only two sorts of reptiles are commonly eaten. These are the frog and the green turtle. The former, which used to be considered peculiar to France, is now brought to London daily by airplane and served at one of the smartest of the large hotels.

In other countries the value of reptiles as food is much better appreciated that it is in the Old World. In Canada, for instance, the small fresh-water turtle, known as the terrapin, is justly considered a great delicacy, and the larger and more plentiful soft-shell turtle is also caught for food.

To the average Canadian the idea of snakes as food is absolutely repulsive. Yet the man who shudders at the idea of roast python thinks nothing of eating an eel.

Col. Fawcett, who has lately returned from one of his expeditions into the unknown wilds of Western Brazil, recently stated that he and his companions had at times to depend almost entirely on snakes for food.

Anaconda, or water python, he declares to be both delicate and wholesome, but the poisonous snakes are not so good. The worst of the lot is that yellow horror, the "bushmaster." The fang of this made some of them ill. Of the other band, "crackers," the poor white of South Florida, eat snakes and enjoy them, but declare that rattlesnake is just as good as eel from a food point of view. Here in Canada, the rattlesnakes have never been used as food. People are content to kill off these reptiles.

Mine Shafts.

In the cementation process of sinking mine shafts through water-bearing grounds, holes are first drilled in a circle around the proposed location of the shaft. Cement and water are forced into the holes with a force pump. The cement spreads through the loose ground, and on setting forms a water-tight wall, inside of which the shaft can be sunk without difficulty.

Flies.

Urging the need for immediate action against flies, an expert said if we assumed that a quart of flies weighed a quarter of a pound, we obtained as the result of one season's breeding of one pair of flies about sixty-three tons of flies.

GERMANY'S SCAPEGOAT

SEEKING THE BLAME FOR THE MARNE DISASTER.

Partizans of Von Kluck and Von Bulow Want to Blame Lieut.-Col. Hentsch, But British Officer Shows Their Case to Be a Very Weak One — Many Stories Have Been Circulated In Germany.

A British army officer, Brig.-Gen. J. E. Edmonds, of the Royal Engineers, has contributed to the Army Quarterly an article entitled "The Scapegoat of the Battle of the Marne, 1914." The writer's purpose is to show that Lieut.-Col. Hentsch was not responsible for the German defeat, as that officer's enemies and the partisans of Von Kluck and Von Bulow have maintained. Col. Hentsch was a staff officer attached to the headquarters of Commander-in-Chief Von Moltke. The colonel was authorized to represent the Supreme Command. Gen. Edmonds explains:

"The custom that obtained in the German army in 1870-71 as regards the power of General Staff liaison officers of Great Headquarters is well known; they were not mere messengers and carriers; they were expected to explain orders, and even to give orders, if necessary, in the name of the Chief of the General Staff, being supposed to be fully conversant with his wishes and intentions."

When the first Battle of the Marne began Von Moltke's headquarters were "back at Luxemburg, more than 150 miles from the First Army (Von Kluck's). Communication was by wireless and by officers in motor cars. On September 8 Von Moltke was in the dark about the state of the battle. To get a clear account of the situation Col. Hentsch was ordered to motor to the Fifth, Fourth, Third, Second and First Armies (a round trip of 400 miles), says the New York Times. He was instructed, in case "rearward movements had already been initiated on the right wing," to give orders that the gap between the First and Second Armies should be closed, and that the First Army should move in the direction of Soissons. Col. Hentsch spent the night of September 8-9 at Second Army headquarters. The commander, Von Bulow, had already made an independent decision to retire behind the Marne. His right flank had been turned; d'Esperey's infantry and Conneau's cavalry corps were actually behind it. Col. Hentsch assented. He had been told to respect the judgment of Von Bulow.

The liaison officer then drove with as little delay as possible—there was a panicky feeling and much confusion behind the lines—to First Army headquarters. In the First Army Operations War Diary there is the following entry:

"Lieut.-Col. Hentsch brought the following information. The situation is not favorable. The Fifth Army is held up before Verdun, the Sixth and Seventh before Nancy-Epinal; the Second Army (Von Bulow's), is simply exhausted. The retreat behind the Marne is irrevocable."

Col. Hentsch transacted his business with Chief of Staff Von Kuhl. Like Von Bulow, the commander of the First Army may have decided to fall back. Von Kluck probably knew that the Second Army was retiring. There is, in fact, evidence that Von Bulow had communicated with him. The War Diary of the First Army contains this singular statement: "Gen. Kuhl remarked to him (Hentsch) that the First Army was in the midst of an attack; a refreat was a very ticklish matter, as the troops were thoroughly mixed up and thoroughly exhausted."

The staff officer, fresh from conferring with Von Bulow, said that nothing else but retreat was now possible. He drew in charcoal a plan of the positions the retreating armies must take up. He made it plain that he had his instructions from Great Headquarters. The first scapegoat after the battle was Gen. Von Hausen, of the Third (Saxon) Army, but he had fought so well at the Marne that the report that he had been removed from his command was soon proved to be false. The truth was that he had to be relieved on account of a severe illness. Then it was rumored that the officer really responsible for the German retreat had been court-martialled and shot. Col. Hentch of the Great General Staff in the field. Col. Hentsch died in service in Roumania in 1916. Von Moltke, before his own death, wrote an account of the first Marne, but it was "officially stopped." The presumption is that he cleared his staff officer. But Hentsch wrote in his own defence. A part of his statement has been published in the Militar Wochenblatt.

Only one extract from it need be made:

"The situation of the First Army about midday (September 9) was such that the left wing had already received the order to go back to the line Crouy-Coulombe. The possibility of the Second Army holding the line of the Marne was therefore out of the question; it must withdraw, even if its flank and rear were not to be enveloped by the British on the 10th."

"I am firmly convinced," said Hentsch in his vindication, "that on my return to Supreme Headquarters on the 10th they thoroughly concurred in my arrangements." Ludendorff, in a general order issued to divisional staffs on May 24, 1917, stated that Hentsch acted in accordance with his instructions, but Ludendorff added that "historical research in later years" must determine whether a retreat was necessary. Gen. Edmonds declares that Von Bulow's decision and Hentsch's concurrence "saved the German Army from a greater disaster than it actually suffered."

There is only one way to kill all the Flies

This is it—Darken the room as much as possible, close the windows, raise one of the blinds where the sun shines in, about eight inches, place as many Wilson's Fly Pads as possible on plates (properly wetted with water but not flooded) on the window ledge where the light is strong, leave the room closed for two or three hours, then sweep up the flies and burn them. See illustration below.

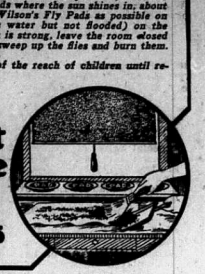
Put the plates away out of the reach of children until required in another room.

The right way to use Wilson's Fly Pads



He Spoke Gaelic.

Somewhere near the scene of Ralph Connor's novels, the "Man From Glengarry" and "Glengarry School Days," was the birthplace of Angus McCrimmon. Elgin County crown attorney and clerk of the peace. Crown Attorney McCrimmon is a Scot of the Scots, and is one of the few legal officials in Ontario who "have the Gaelic." He not only has it, but uses it as well. It is only a few months since he achieved national fame by addressing the Elgin County Council in the ancient Highland tongue. Nobody yet knows exactly what he said, but the speech was well received, so well in fact that a little later, when St. Thomas was welcoming the newly appointed Judge, Duncan C. Ross, Mr. McCrimmon again essayed an address in Gaelic which seemed be acceptable.

To be specific, Angus McCrimmon was born in McCrimmon village in the township of Lochiel. The place was named after the McCrimmon family, which view with the McDonalds and the McKenzies as the earliest Glengarry settlers. He went to school in Glengarry and later attended the Cornwall Grammar School. After a course at Normal School, Mr. McCrimmon taught school at Teeswater, Durham and St. Thomas. In the last-named city he studied law with the late E. A. Horton. He was called to the bar in 1884, and was appointed crown attorney in 1903. Mr. McCrimmon was Liberal candidate in the provincial election of 1919 being defeated by Dugald McColl. In 1902 he ran against Hon. F. G. Macdiarmid and Hon. Gaylord Wiltshire, a Socialist, the former being successful.

Mr. McCrimmon is one of the best known lawyers and court officials in Western Ontario.

The Name of Lacrosse.

Although the white men adopted the game of lacrosse from the Indians, they invented their own name for it. It would have been impossible to call it by any of the names used by the Indians, with the possible exception of "baggataway." Even that one, although you can say it, is rather a mouthful.

Listen to some of the others.

The Algonquins called it "Telontsestksaheks."

The Iroquois gave it a name which has been rendered thus, "Tehontshik-8-sheks."

The French found it easier to invent a name of their own. The sticks that the Indians used looked like a bishop's crozier, and accordingly the first settlers spoke of the implement as "la crosse." In course of time the two French words came together into the modern "lacrosse."

There are still some old-fashioned persons who speak of the lacrosse stick as the crosse.

Bible as a Serial.

A Kansas newspaper has gained the distinction of being the first daily newspaper in the United States to publish the Bible in serial form, in response to the suggestion of Dr. Charles Sheldon, author of "In His Steps." Modern newspaper methods are to be used in presenting the story of the Bible, and the chapters will be translated into everyday English, with "snappy" headlines. The Gospel according to St. Mark, for example, will be presented as "The good news as recorded by Mark." It may be mentioned that during the past year the British Foreign Bible Society issued editions in ten new tongues—eight in Africa, one in Asia and one in Oceania. A record order of 85,000 copies of the Bible was received from Russia. Recently there was published a work giving specimens of the 543 languages in which the Bible was published in whole or in part.

Huck Finn: the Original.

Huckleberry Finn, like Stalky, was drawn from real life. Barney Farthing, the original of Mark Twain's most famous character, died a pauper in 1917, having spent the last years of his life in a county almshouse not far from the little town where he and Mark Twain were schoolfellows. So closely was Barney Farthing identified with the hero of the novel that for years he answered to the name of Huck. "Original to the last," wrote an American journalist at the time of his death, "Barney made the coffin in which he was buried — made it in protest against the outrageous prices of the Coffin Trust."

NEWS FROM THE OTHER SIDE

Interesting Letter From Woman in South Africa

Johannesburg, South Africa.—"I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for weakness and because I felt run down. I tried a lot of medicines before I tried yours. One day I was standing on my stoop when, boy came up to me and handed me one of your little books. I read the book and the next day my husband went to the chemist's and bought me a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I have taken the medicine ever since and I feel quite strong and well now as I am on the sixth bottle. I have written to my sister and told her all about the wonders it has done for me, and I am quite willing for you to use my name as I can not thank you enough for what it has done for me."—Mrs. W. F. Rush, 128 6th Ave., Mayfair, Pordesburg, Johannesburg, South Africa.

It is this sort of praise of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, given by letter or verbally, one woman to another, that ought to commend this splendid medicine to you.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is a medicine for women's ailments (in use nearly fifty years), and the fact that it has helped thousands of other women, should cause you to give it a trial now. It can be safely taken by any woman—young or old.

JOFFRE IN CANADA.

Hero of the Marne Made Great Popular Appeal.

A man who can survive his own blunders, his own press agent and the unpopularity of his own job and still be a popular hero is — well, a man.

The war being an unpopular theme, no mention shall be made here of the achievements of the French commander in the first great battle of the western front. Fortunately for the world, the then Gen. Joffre did not make his blunders at the Marne or while guarding the battle line from the Somme to Switzerland.

Deposed, he made his first visit to America and simply made Viviani, Balfour, King Albert and all other visitors except the Prince of Wales look like dull clods. The strange combination of impassivity and energy, and above all the hearty simplicity of the old man won all.

Marshal Foch was brought over to outshine him—and failed. The little generalissimo may have been a greater strategist, as Joffre himself was the first to admit, but he had not the something or other that made for applause and acclaim. Foch had all the publicity resources of the American Legion and the Knights of Columbus, while Joffre had Joffre. Some said that it was the war fever that made the grizzled, stout old Papa so popular on this side of the water. If Foch had come in 1918, just after Chateau Thierry! they said.

After Foch comes Joffre again, by the back door, unheralded, unofficially, badly press-agented, under unpopular patronage, himself making blunders in public—and yet he triumphs again.

Since the arrival at Seattle of Marshal Joffre on his way home to France from his trip around the world varying reports have come of the warmth of his reception. In the Pacific Northwest he was exploited by the Hill interest, lending himself to this unpopular patronage quite innocently but disastrously. But when he got to San Francisco and was again nobody's man but his own there was a different story.

Victoria, B.C., staid and English, made rather a point of taking his visit placidly, according to one account, and even Vancouver did not wax enthusiastic. It is said that in dedicating the "peace portal" at Blaine, Washington, on the Canada-United States boundary in commemoration of the century of peace, he made a jarring speech. After pacific speeches by Samuel Hill, the builder of the portal, and a woman, the marshal startled those who understood the French language by making a gruff, curt speech saying that peace portals were "all right, but where would France be now if she hadn't built forts instead of peace arches before 1914."

That was a bounder, indeed, and enough to gain most men as drawing cards in the country where they don't raise their boys to be soldiers. Joffre was toted around from Seattle by the globe-trotter, Sam Hill, son-in-law of James J. Hill, railway magnate, and this feature made newspapermen very angry with Hill and lukewarm towards Joffre.

Then Joffre went to Frisco by himself and, although ill, made a tremendous impression. This he heightened on the swing east, even making speeches. His very silence was more effective than the great eloquence of his colleague (and rival) Viviani on the earlier tour. This time he has had the floor and his words have been vigorous, pointed and courteous. People come prepared to be lukewarm toward a representative of French military power and policy. They stay to cheer the man whose square massive face, barrel body, instinct with reserve energies of spirit, will never be forgotten.

The man who saved Paris and conquered North America (including Montreal, although he is a Protestant) was born in 1852, first saw service in 1870 and was retired in 1917 as too old. Yet last year he was young enough to undertake a tour which covered half of Asia, including Indo-China, China and Japan. Having conveyed the thanks of France to her Oriental colonies and allies, he retires to the little home in his native Pyreneean mountains to which his eyes turned even the day after the battle of the Marne.

King Albert as Sentry.

Kingship at its highest finds expression in a story told Mrs. Ralph C. Norton, of London, England, by a Belgian soldier. This soldier had received a gossel at the front. He read of God, but because he could not see Him he could not believe in His reality and presence, although he longed so to believe. One night at the Yser, he was on sentry duty. Alone, in the presence of danger, his thoughts turned again to God with longing. As he thought he was aware of someone behind him. When he could look, he did turn his head, and he saw his king. Yes, it was King Albert—standing sentry duty with him, sharing in the very experience of his soldiers. For two hours behind him, motionless, stood his monarch, and in that interval, as he thought and prayed, came faith, faith in God, through Christ. The presence of his king, silent, yet so near, the marvel of the whole experience, had brought to him faith in the presence and personality of God.

Mrs. Norton, the narrator, was presented to Queen Elizabeth of Belgium, and received the Order of St. Elizabeth from her majesty. She told the queen this story and there were tears in the eyes of Albert's consort as she finished. "I shall tell it to the king," said the royal listener.

To Holders of Five Year 5½ per cent Canada's Victory Bonds

Issued in 1917 and Maturing 1st December, 1922.

CONVERSION PROPOSALS

THE MINISTER OF FINANCE offers to holders of these bonds who desire to continue their investment in Dominion of Canada securities the privilege of exchanging the maturing bonds for new bonds bearing 5½ per cent interest, payable half yearly, of either of the following classes:—

(a) Five year bonds, dated 1st November, 1922, to mature 1st November, 1927.

(b) Ten year bonds, dated 1st November, 1922, to mature 1st November, 1932.

While the maturing bonds will carry interest to 1st December, 1922, the new bonds will commence to earn interest from 1st November, 1922, GIVING A BONUS OF A FULL MONTH'S INTEREST TO THOSE AVAILING THEMSELVES OF THE CONVERSION PRIVILEGE.

This offer is made to holders of the maturing bonds and is not open to other investors. The bonds to be issued under this proposal will be substantially of the same character as those which are maturing, except that the exemption from taxation does not apply to the new issue.

Holders of the maturing bonds who wish to avail themselves of this conversion privilege should take their bonds AS EARLY AS POSSIBLE, BUT NOT LATER THAN SEPTEMBER 30th, to a Branch of any Chartered Bank in Canada and receive in exchange an official receipt for the bonds surrendered, containing an undertaking to deliver the corresponding bonds of the new issue.

Holders of maturing fully registered bonds, interest payable by cheque from Ottawa, will receive their December 1 interest cheque as usual. Holders of coupon bonds will detach and retain the last unmatured coupon before surrendering the bond itself for conversion purposes.

The surrendered bonds will be forwarded by banks to the Minister of Finance at Ottawa, where they will be exchanged for bonds of the new issue, in fully registered, or coupon registered or coupon bearer form carrying interest payable 1st May and 1st November of each year of the duration of the loan, the first interest payment accruing and payable 1st May, 1923. Bonds of the new issue will be sent to the banks for delivery immediately after the receipt of the surrendered bonds.

The bonds of the maturing issue which are not converted under this proposal will be paid off in cash on the 1st December, 1922.

Dated at Ottawa, 8th August, 1922.

W. S. FIELDING,
Minister of Finance.

County Coal.

We congratulate Mr. J. S. Johnston, Reeve of Adolphustown, and chairman of the County Property Committee, in securing from Mr. G. A. Wartman, Bath, a sufficient quantity of anthricate coal for the court house, gaol and registry office for next winter. It cost $16 a ton at Bath, and $2.25 a ton for transportation, which work was under the management of Mr. J. Chatterson. The coal has all been delivered, so county officials will be no cooler than they generally are.

52 Mills on the Dollar.

The tax rate for Deseronto is fifty-two mills on the dollar. The chairman of the Finance Committee said the revenue for the coming year should be $67,157.91, less estimated receipts, $17,000-95, a total of $40,550.96. The assessed value of all property, business taxes, etc., is $952,896. Fifty-two mills on the dollar on that amount will realize the amount required.

WILL FORM NEW CHURCH.

"Reformation" In Russia Supported by Soviet.

MOSCOW, Aug.14.—A new, living church which will support the Soviet regime is taking over control of all Russian ecclesiastical affairs. Led by Bishops Antonin and Agit, it plans to oust most of the old bishops still in control, abolish the ikon and elaborate ceremonies and do away with monasteries and monks.

One of the interesting features of its program is that it will urge all its new bishops to marry, and thus keep in close touch with life. Leaders of this new movement are now meeting in Moscow.

Besides Antonin and Anit, local priests have appointed three other bishops to represent their dioceses and more delegates are on their way here.

Antonin and Anit have a document from the ousted patriarch Tichon, giving them control of the church. This was drawn up after his two metropolitans, Benjamin and Argafalin, were jailed for resisting seizure of church treasures for famine relief.

Armed with this paper, the two bishops are recognizing the Russian church. Ostensibly the Soviet Government is ignoring them, but actually it makes no secret that it welcomes their aid as the new movement checkmates the old reactionistic priests. It is significant that the meetings of the new group are held in a Soviet building where sleeping quarters have been provided for the delegates.

Their movement is taking two forms The first is against counter-revolutionary Church propaganda of the old priests. The second is against the old "black" hierarchy. It was decided to support all Soviet institutions that conform with Christian communism." It was also decided then to permit and even encourage bishops to marry.

"We have not had married bishops since the beginning," one of the readers said, "but the Greeks did. We are going back to the people, live like them and not for ourselves in monasteries."

The new church will have no patriarchs and metropolitans. The highest ecclesiastics will be the bishops and a democratic constituent assembly will run church affairs. Lay delegates to this assembly will play a considerable part.

PEACE IS IN SIGHT.

Coal Strike Settlement Looked For This Week.

CLEVELAND, O., Aug. 14.—The coal peace conference buckles into its second week with union chiefs declaring that settlement of the bituminous strike will be here by Wednesday.

John L. Lewis, national head of the United Mine Workers, said: "I am optimistic that it will be possible to reach an agreement within the next 48 hours. We are hopeful the conference will develop something definite along this line. The developments of the last twelve hours have been gratifying and portend an end of the long strike now entering its twentieth week. An important development in respect to the anthracite situation also has taken place to-day, and I feel assured that a joint conference of operators and miners will be arranged and actually take place within a few days."

Among the 150 union representatives here the general talk is that they will be checking out by Wednesday with the strike settled. The question of arbitration is to be threshed out first. Michael Gallagher, president of the Pittsburg Vein Operators' Association of Ohio, and Mr. Lewis have been striving to frame a plank on this. "Strike prevention" is the new term attached to the idea, and the chief difficulty is in finding a formula which to the miners will not mean arbitration and to the operators will look something like arbitration.

The miners, Mr. Lewis says, have not receded one jot from their position against arbitration. If settlement terms are reached, the men are expected to be ordered back to the pits forthwith, the matter of a referendum vote to be taken up later. Opinion is it would be a mere formality.

IRISH LEADER PASSES

Tragic Death of Arthur Griffith Shocks Ireland.

He Was One of the Founders of the Sinn Fein Movement, But He Also Favored the Settlement by Which Ireland Became a Free State—Messages Received From England.

DUBLIN, Aug. 14.—The death of Arthur Griffith was tragically sudden. It was generally believed that he was only suffering from a temporary breakdown and would be about again in a few days. His immediate ailment was tonsilitis, for which he was operated upon a few days ago. The operation was successful, and Griffith had recovered from it and was able to spend some time in his office each day attending to the affairs of state.

Saturday morning Griffith appeared to be quite well, as prior to leaving for the office just before 10 o'clock he cheerfully bade goodmorning to one of the nursing staff. The sister states that he then stooped to tie a shoe lace when he suddenly fell forward in a faint. The sister and other members of the staff were immediately at hand to render him assistance. When Griffith regained consciousness the sister asked him if he had ever been taken ill in that way before, and Griffith said "No." He was immediately placed in bed, a priest and doctor being sent for.

In the meantime he again collapsed and blood was seen issuing from his mouth. Dr. Meadmanus, Dr. Meade and Dr. Gregory rendered all assistance possible, but without success. Griffith passed away within a few minutes, not, however, before Rev. John Lee of the Marist Fathers' House, a few doors away, had attended and administered the last rites of the Roman Catholic Church. Immediately after the priest had concluded his administrations Griffith quietly expired.

"It was very sudden," said an eyewitness, describing Griffith's last moments. "The doctors had done all they could, and Father Lee had given extreme unction and had said the concluding prayer, when one of the doctors said, 'He is dead.' Everyone present was deeply affected by the swift passing of this silent, strong man."

The Prime Minister, Mr. Lloyd George, has telegraphed Michael Collins, head of the Irish Provisional Governments, expressing his deep distress and learning of the death of Arthur Griffith. Mr. Lloyd George's telegram read:

"My admiration for his singleminded patriotism, his ability, sincerity and courage had grown steadily since I met him first less than a year ago. His character made a deep impression upon British Ministers who shared with him in those unremitting labors in which he was called upon to play such a testing and difficult part. His work will fall heavily on Ireland, but I trust his work will go on to complete success."

Arthur Griffith was 50 years old, having been born in Dublin in 1872. Although believed to be partly of Welsh ancestry, his name would indicate, Griffith was wholly Irish in sentiment. He signed the Free State agreement with the Gaelic name of Art of Griffithe. He was by trade a printer, and began to write in the cause of the self-government of Ireland upon reaching maturity. He was convincing though not an inspiring speaker, but it was through his writings that he influenced the thought of his fellow-Irishmen.

More than twenty years ago Griffith and a handful of disciples launched the Sinn Fein movement. His policy was one of Irish self-reliance (Sinn Fein means "ourselves"), and he persisted, despite many discouragements, in his efforts to bring about the self-government of Ireland by peaceful means. The establishment of the Irish Free State was not inconsistent with this theory.

Griffith was one of the leaders of the Sinn Fein at the time of the Easter rebellion in 1916, as a result of which a number of leaders were executed. The rising greatly strengthened the Sinn Fein movement, which soon built up an extensive organization.

In October, 1917, Griffith was elected presiding officer for the opening of the Sinn Fein conference in Dublin. During the Peace Conference at Paris in 1919 he was chosen as an Irish delegate to present the Irish case, but failure to get a safe conduct from the British Government prevented his attendance. In July, 1919, Griffith was elected Acting President of the Irish National Assembly in the absence of de Valera, who was in the United States. In October of the same year he was elected one of the permanent vice-presidents of the Sinn Fein organization.

Griffith was arrested in Dublin in November, 1920, and spent seven months in Mountjoy Prison. During his imprisonment he issued a message to the Irish people as to the conduct of the Sinn Fein organization. An attempt was made to rescue him from prison, but the armored car used for the purpose failed to carry out its mission.

Newfoundland Sends Iron Ore to Germany.

The Oldest Colony Has Decided to Deal With the Enemy on Pre-war Basis—Big Contracts Have Been Made and Shipload After Shipload Leaves Daily for Fatherland.

NEW YORK, Aug. 14.—Iron ore is going out and German money is coming in, in Newfoundland, as before the war, Lord Morris, former Premier of that colony, said at the Hotel McAlpine.

Lord Morris has been for some forty years connected with public life of Newfoundland, though he retired formally from politics at the time of his resignation as Premier, in January, 1919. He is at present a member of the executive of the British Empire Exhibition to be held in London in 1924.

He has been in Newfoundland for several weeks in connection with the exhibition, and is in New York for a week on his way back.

To a question as to the restoration of trade with Germany he said: "The Dominion Iron & Steel Co., and the Nova Scotia Steel Co., who own the iron mines on Belle Isle, Newfoundland, have entered into large contracts with Germany to supply it with the product of these mines. Shipload after shipload is now daily leaving Newfoundland for German ports. Contracts have been made for upwards of 700,000 tons for this season."

"One of the largest pulp and paper mills in the world was established at Grand Falls in 1905 by Lord Northcliffe and his associates," he said. "The paper upon which newspaper and magazines are now printed in London is mostly obtained from the forests of Newfoundland. Spruce is used entirely. They can cut within their concession at the present rate for a hundred years without exhausting their supply, even if the forests did not reproduce themselves; but the spruce forests do not reproduce themselves for pulp purposes in less than twenty years.

"Another large concern, known as the Humber Proposition, on the Humber river, is now being considered by the owners of the property and by English capitalists and engineers. It is said the water powers on this property, as well as the timber, promises to produce a development quite equal to the finest mills in the world."

Conditions in Newfoundland and in Canada are hopeful, Lord Morris declared. "Canada has turned the corner," he said, "and is meeting with a considerable measure of success in solving the political and fiscal problems resulting from the war."

As to England, he observed: "England is endeavoring to solve not alone her own problems, but the problems of the world.

"Judged by the number of unemployed, there has been a sensible improvement in the labor market recently during the last three or four months. The number of registered unemployed has fallen from 2,000,000 to 1,400,000."

Costly New Buildings.

TORONTO, Aug. 14.—New buildings valued at $1,500,000 will be opened this year at the Canadian National Exhibition. These costly additions to the exhibition city will enable the manufacturers to make a greater display than in past years, and should help along the revival feeling of business optimism. The impressive new Coliseum, which will be formally dedicated, was erected at a cost of a million dollars. It has a seating capacity for 7,600 people, and the amphitheatre, where the judging ring is located, is 237 feet wide and 265 feet long. This giant structure has over eight acres under its roof, and will have a pronounced effect upon the plans of expansion. Nearly half a million dollars will be expended upon equipment and fixtures. The new Pure Food Building cost $150,000. The fact that these two important buildings will be utilized this year has increased the confidence of the manufacturers in the efficiency of the Fair.

To Plead Cause of Hindus.

VICTORIA, Aug. 14.—To plead the cause of a united India and see that his countrymen now resident in Canada are accorded fair treatment, Rt. Hon. Stinivasa Sastri, acknowledged leader of moderation and the anti-Gandhi movement in India, arrived here Sunday aboard the Makura. He probably will remain here a week to confer with Lieutenant-Governor Nichol and Premier Oliver before starting his tour of Canada. In Ottawa he will discuss the question of Hindu privileges in this country, and will then go to the United States, where he will appear as a private citizen of India to combat anti-British propaganda. The official part of his mission is to work for the parliamentary and municipal franchise for Hindus who are domiciled in Canada under the terms of the imperial Conference agreement of 1908.

Crows Make Record.

LONGMIRE, Wash., Aug. 14.—Three crows achieved a record flight for altitude across the glaciers of Mount Rainier this week, according to ornithologists. The birds were observed by a party of mountaineers making the ascent of the mountain, and were at an altitude of 8,300 feet when the crows passed over them, apparently very groggy from the rarified atmosphere. Naturalists have claimed that birds do not fly at a great height, although 6,000 feet is often attained by eagles, larks and a few other species. Ptarmigans on Mount Rainier are sometimes seen up to 9,000 feet altitude.

WEBSTER —MAN'S MAN

Peter B. Kyne

Author of "Cappy Ricks," "The Valley of the Giants," Etc.

"Well, and Why Didn't You?"

"You scoundrel! What have you sent me?"

"A couple of hundred rifles and three machine guns, branded axes, picks, shovels, plows, and so on. I also ran in three cases of ammunition, labeled grindstones, two more cases disguised as bolts, and quite several thousand labeled nails in kegs. I should feel rather sorry for you if my friend, Sarros, should get suspicious and investigate, but I haven't any fear that he will. You see, he knows you're here on legitimate business. He has investigated and learned that you are a bona fide mining engineer of considerable reputation—and then, you know, your friend, Geary, dickered with him for the concession. The mining property you are about to develop belongs to the people, not to Sarros; yet he has bartered it away and will divert the royalty to his own pocket instead of the public treasury."

"Hum-m-m! What do you want me to do with all those munitions consigned to me?"

"Arrange with Leber to keep them there until you get ready to build your road into the mine. I want them there when my American mercenaries arrive in Buenaventura. By the way, you are going to import these mercenaries for me. They are American miners and road builders in the employ of the Honda Mining & Development company, which is to be the name of your enterprise. I hope you'll like the name, Webster. I picked it out myself."

"You cool scoundrel! You're making cat's paw out of me."

"That is because you happen to be so handy for my purpose. You see my plan, do you not? I'm going to attack Buenaventura from within and without. I'm going to come down on Sarros like a wolf on the fold, and the job is scheduled for next Saturday night a week."

"Look here, Rick, my boy, I have no desire to mix in the politics of this country."

"You have some desire, however, to mix in its wealth," Ricardo reminded him.

"Well?"

"I'm the only man that can help you. By the way, do not order your machinery shipped until after I am seated firmly on the throne of my fathers."

"Why?"

"It's been framed with Sarros to let you spend your money on that concession and get the mine in running order; then a fake suit, alleging an error in the government survey, will be filed. It will be claimed that the concession given your friend, Geary, is, by virtue of erroneous government surveys, the property of a citizen of Sobrante. The courts here do as Sarros tells them. You are to be kicked out, busted, and despairing, and your nicely equipped little mine will be taken over as a government monopoly and run for the benefit of the government, to-wit, Sarros and his satellites. We had to cook up a dirty deal like that to save your life. Of course, now that I have warned you in time you are safe. We achieved a precaution, however, that worked both ways. It enabled us to save you and to save us, by permitting the shipment, free of suspicion, of arms for the rebels that are to attack the city from within. Naturally I had to cache their arms within the city—and that was a hard problem until you happened along. Thank you, fairy godfather."

"My thanks are due you, Ricardo. I'm for you, first, last, and all the time, and against this Sarros outfit. By the way, how do you purpose moving your machine guns?"

"We'll have to carry them, I guess."

"Well, I'll have a small auto-truck delivered in Buenaventura by that time. You might arrange to armor it with sheet steel; and with a couple of machine guns mounted in it, and a crew of resolute Americans behind the machine guns, you could carry from one end of the city to the other and clear a path for your infantry."

"Thank you, my friend. I'll borrow the motor truck and arrange to armor it. That's a lully idea. Are you bound for Buenaventura now?"

Webster nodded. "Then," Ricardo suggested, "I'll meet you in my room at El Buen Amigo Wednesday night at 11 and explain the details of my plans to you if you care to hear them. I think they're air-tight myself, but somehow I think I'd feel more certain of them if you approve them."

"I'll be there, Rick, and the day you run that outlaw Sarros off the grass you'll know why I am for you."

"Good-by, old man. You will never know how grateful you have made me."

Ruey shook hands with Webster and rode off through the timber leaving John Stuart Webster to pursue the even tenor of his way, until at length he arrived once more in Buenaventura and sought accommodations at the Hotel Mateo. And there as he entered the lobby and gazed through a glass door across the patio and into the veranda, he saw that which disturbed him greatly. In a big wicker rocker Dolores Ruey sat, rocking gently and busily stitching on a piece of fancy work!

Billy Geary gone back to the United States, and Dolores was still in Buenaventura! Amazing! Why, what the devil did Billy mean by letting her have her own way like that? Of course, they hadn't been married, or she would not now be out there on the veranda, and, of course, they hadn't quarreled, because that was an impossibility, and, of course, Billy had departed alone for the U. S. A., else he would have returned to their camp in the hills back of San Miguel de Padua.

"Well, I know what I'm going to do," Webster decided. "I'm not going to be led into temptation while Billy's not on the job—so I'll not put up at the Hotel Mateo after all. I'll just sneak around to El Buen Amigo and fix it with that old Mother Jenks not to tip off my presence in town to Dolores Ruey until I can get the lay of the land and see what the devil has happened to all my well-laid plans."

He retreated out the front door and called a carriage, into which he was about to step, bag and baggage, when Don Juan Cafetero came rushing up in great excitement. "Sure, where are ye goin' now, sor. Is there no room for ye in the Hotel Mateo?"

"Their beds have jiggers in them, and I just remembered that," Webster fibbed. "Hop in, John, and we'll drive around to Mr. Geary's lodging in El Buen Amigo."

"But I come t'rough the patio just now," Don Juan explained, "an' who should I meet but the young leddy."

"You infernal scoundrel! Did you tell her I was in town?"

"Sure I did, sor. An' why not?"

"None of your infernal business. You've spoiled everything. You're a muddle-headed monkey and I've a great notion to let you get drunk again. Take the baggage back into the hotel."

Don Juan Cafetero, greatly humbled and rebuffed, stepped aside and watched Webster stride back into the hotel. "God love ye, sor," he mumbled, "knowin' what I know, is it likely I'd let ye make a monkey out av her or yerself? Ye made yer plans wit' Misther Geary wit'out consultin' her. Now go, ye grrund big divil, an' find out why she kicked yer schame to smithereens." And with a solemn and knowing wink at the duffle bag, Don Juan picked that article up and followed after his master.

CHAPTER XIII.

John Stuart Webster's agile brain was the repository of many conflicting emotions as he bathed, shaved, and changed from his soiled khaki field clothes to a suit of ducks before presenting himself before Dolores.

Had Billy's courage forsaken him at the last minute, with the result that he had gone back to the United States without having settled the question of Dolores' future? Had he proposed and been rejected, or had he proposed, been accepted, and had his plans for an immediate marriage vetoed by Dolores?

In either event, why had Billy failed to leave a note for him at the Hotel Mateo, or mailed him a letter to the Globo de Oro at San Miguel de Padua, advising him of the change in the plan of action outlined for him by Webster?

In the simplicity of his single-hearted devotion Webster was puzzled to understand how any woman in her right mind could fail to fall in love with Billy Geary. A man he was, from heels to hair, and a man with prospects far above the average. To Webster's way of thinking, the girl who married Billy might well count herself fortunate.

Dolores greeted him with unaffected pleasure. "Well, Caliph!" she said. Just that. It made Webster sensible of a feeling of having returned to her after an absence of several years. "I'm so glad to see you, Miss Ruey," he replied, and added boldly, "particularly since I didn't expect to."

She knew what her reply would lead to; nevertheless, with that dissimulation which can only be practiced in perfection by a clever and beautiful woman, she answered with equal boldness: "Indeed? Pray why?"

"Well, I'm a pretty good reason, I think. A few weeks ago, after examining Billy's concession very thoroughly, I told him he was a potential millionaire. Now, while I disclaim any appearance of being a medic, when John Stuart Webster, E. M., makes any mine owner a report like that, he is apt to be taken very seriously. And having made Bill a potential millionaire and arranged to give him three or four months' vacation back home, I had a notion he'd present to you a very valid reason why you should accompany him."

"You are very frank, Caliph."

"That's because I'm curious. He had a certain dream, and told me about it, and I did my little best to make it come true."

"I think I understand, Caliph. It would be very difficult, I think, for anybody to meet Billy without being attracted toward him. He's one of the dearest, most lovable boys in the world—and he did do me the signal honor of asking me to marry him. So there!"

"Well, and why didn't you?"

She smiled at his blunt insistence on forcing the issue. "For a number of excellent reasons, Caliph. In the first place, he wanted me to marry him immediately—and I wasn't ready to leave Sobrante, while Billy was. Indeed, it was highly necessary that he should leave immediately, for the sake of his health, and I had Billy's interest at heart sufficiently to insist upon it. You seem to forget that when a girl marries she must make some preparation for the event, and alternative. "As I understand it, then, Caliph, Ricardo hopes to win his revolution when he strikes the first blow."

"I think so. I dare say Ricardo hopes to take Sarros by surprise, bottle the city garrison up in the cantel and the government palace and there besiege them. Having secured nominal control of a seaport, he can import arms and ammunition; also he can recruit openly, and at his leisure hunt down the outlying garrisons. The Sarros crowd doesn't suspect his presence in Sobrante, and by a quick, savage stroke he should be able to jerk this one-horse government up by the heels in big time—particularly since the citizenry feel no loyalty toward the Sarros regime and are only kept in subjection through fear and lack of organization. I'm going to play Lafitte do to win, if he isn't killed in the opening row, for I'm certain he'll lead his men."

"I dare say he is greatly like his father—not afraid to die for his country," she replied presently. "I am glad to be here when he takes that risk."

"Oh, but you mustn't be here," Webster protested.

"Why?"

"Because there'll be street fighting—probably of a desperate character, and I understand your countrymen go rather war-mad and do things not sanctioned by The Hague tribunal. If there's a steamer in port at the time I'll put you aboard her until the issue is decided. I'm going to see Ricardo tomorrow night and learn the details of his plan of campaign; and that I'll be able to act intelligently."

* * * *

Ricardo Ruey, with Dr. Pacheco and Colonel Caraveo, were engaged in consultation when Jack Webster, having left the Hotel Mateo via his bedroom window in order to avoid possible espionage and made his way to El Buen Amigo on foot, was announced by Mother Jenks. The three conspirators greeted him joyously, as indeed they should, for his loyal friendship had thus far been one of their principal bulwarks.

"Well," Webster inquired, after greeting them and carefully closing the door behind him, "what's up in Buenaventura, marking time and, like Mr. Micawber, waiting for something to turn up."

"You will not be required to wait long," Colonel Caraveo assured him. "Thanks to your kindly offices, the trap is already baited."

"Our friend, Ruey, has, since our first meeting, insisted on dispensing with the services of your partner, to promote his enterprises, Colonel Strange to say, I have been unable to operate him for his impudence. I was down at Leber's warehouse this afternoon. You have enough round-table tools contained in the—there to build a pretty fair highway to the gates of the government palace, I should say. I hope you have all pondered the result to me, an innocent bystander, if your plans should cause a rodent to open one of those cases of shovels."

Colonel Caraveo favored him with a benignant smile. "You forget, my friend, that I am second in command in the intelligence department, and that among the papers of your particular friend, Raoul Sarros, in New Orleans, I am first in command. Since I already know what those cases contain, naturally I shall not take the trouble to investigate."

"Well, it's a comfort, Colonel."

"You have investigated your mining concession, Webster?" Ricardo Ruey asked.

"You bet."

"What did you find?"

"A couple of millions in sight."

Ricardo shook his head slowly. "It is not in sight, old man," he reminded Webster. "Without our aid—and you cannot have our aid unless our revolution is successful, when you shall have it freely—your millions are most positively, not in sight. If you want those millions, friend Webster, there is but one way to get them—and that is to close your eyes and play our game to the limit. I wonder if you'd go further—about $40,000 further, to be exact."

"I might, but I never go it blind for a wad like that. What's your trouble?"

"The individual in charge of the funds of the revolutionary junta in New Orleans was murdered last night; the funds were deposited to his credit as agent in a certain bank, and before the junta can obtain legal possession of them again the psychological time for their use will have passed.

"We have a steamer chartered, and 200 men, whose business it is to fight under my flag at $5 gold per day and no questions asked, are now marking time on the Isle of Pines, off the coast of Cuba, waiting for our steamer to call for them and land them, with their rifles and ammunition and six 75-millimeter field guns and some rapid-fire Maxims, at San Bruno, some 18 miles up the coast from here.

"The guns and munitions are now in Tampa, having been shipped to our agent there on sight draft, with bill of lading attached; the steamer is chartered and en route to Tampa from Norfolk, Va., and we must pay the owners $10,000 the day she begins taking on her cargo, and $10,000 before she unloads it on lighters at San Bruno.

"We must also pay 200 men one month's pay in advance—that is, $30,000; we cannot meet this expense and still take up that sight draft now awaiting our attention in the bank at Tampa.

"In return for this favor to the provisional government of Sobrante, you shall have the note of the provisional government, signed by the provisional president, myself, and the provisional cabinet, Dr. Pacheco, Colonel Caraveo, and two other gentlemen whom you will meet in due course unless in the interim they should be killed. And as a bonus for saving this country from a brutal dictator, who is pillaging its resources for his personal prof it, you shall have a deed of gift to that mining concession you and your friend, Geary, are so desirous of working; also the title shall be certified by the government and the Supreme court of Sobrante and absolutely se cured to you against future aggression in the event that the new regime should be overthrown at some future date. Also you have my profound gratitude and that of my people."

"Tell Me Your Plan of Campaign."

"Tell me your plan of campaign," Webster suggested.

"In a secret rendezvous in the mountains I have 1,000 picked men—my father's veterans. They are armed with modern rifles and machine guns. A nitrate company, which has been suffering from heavy export duties imposed by Sarros, has loaned me all the rolling stock of the railroad for one night. It will be mobilized at San Miguel de Padua by next Saturday night; my troops will arrive late the same afternoon and entrain at once.

"In the interim all telephone and telegraph communication by the Buenaventura will be severed. The night previous our steamer will have discharged her cargo of men and munitions at San Bruno; a chain of outposts will at once be established and all communication with the capital will be shut off.

"On Saturday night, also, the Consolidated Fruit company's steamer, La Estrellita, will make port with 30 Americans in her company. These men will be road-makers and miners imported by Mr. J. S. Webster, and in order to make certain that they will come, you have already ordered them by cable. We have arranged with the port doctor to give La Estrellita a clean bill of health the very night she arrives. Hence the ship's authorities will not be suspicious, I hope, when our American men after dark and house them in Leber's warehouse, where they will spend the night unpacking those spades, picks and shovels of yours and getting the factory grease off them.

"At 4 o'clock in the morning various citizens of Sobrante, with rebellion in their hearts, will begin to mobilize at Leber's warehouse, where they will be issued rifles and ammunition and where they will wait until the action is opened to the south by the detachment from San Bruno, which, having marched from San Bruno the night before, will have arrived outside the city, and be awaiting the signal from me. I will attack from the west—cautiously.

"Now, there are 5,000 government troops in the city and in various cantonments on the outskirts. Those cantonments are to be rushed and set afire; I figure that the confusion of our sudden attack will create a riot—particularly when I do something that isn't very popular as a war feature down this way, and that is charge—and keep on coming.

"The government troops will start to fall back on the city, only to find themselves flanked by a fierce artillery fire from the San Bruno contingent; the troops from the arsenal, the guards at the palace and the Fifteenth regiment of infantry, now stationed at the Cuartel de Infanteria, next the government palace, will be dispatched post haste to repulse the attack, and 400 men, with the machine gun company waiting in Leber's warehouse, will promptly move upon them from the rear and capture the arsenal. There are a few thousand rifles and a lot of ammunition stored there; I miss my guess if, as soon as the news of its capture by the rebels spreads through the city (and I shall have men to spread it), I shall not have a few thousand volunteers eager to help overthrow Sarros.

"Once cut off from the arsenal and the palace, Sarros must fight his way out of the city in order to have the slightest chance to suppress the rebellion, for he will have no refuge in the city. And with the railroad and all the rolling stock in our hands, without a commissary for his troops, without a base of supplies, even should the government troops fight their way through, they leave the city in my hands and I'll recruit and arm my men and hunt them down like jack rabbits at my leisure. Once let the arsenal and the palace fall into my hands, once let me proclaim myself provisional president, once let the people know that Ricardo Ruey, the beloved, lives again in the person of his son, and I tell you, Webster, this country is saved. How do you like my plan of campaign?"

"It couldn't be any better if I had planned it myself. You might accept my suggestion and armor that little motor truck of mine. It arrived on yesterday's steamer."

"And some armor sheet steel with it—sheet steel already loop-holed for the barrels of the two machine guns it will carry!" Dr. Pacheco cried joyously.

"Have you provided a chauffeur, Doctor?"

"I have—likewise an armored sheet-steel closet for him to sit in while chaffeuring."

"How about that loan to the provisional government?' Ricardo demanded pointedly.

Webster did not hesitate. After all, what was money to him? Billy had gone away, his hopes raised high, already a millionaire after the fashion of mining men, who are ever ready to count their chicks before they are hatched, provided only they see the eggs. Besides, there was Dolores. Full well Webster realized that Billy's tossed back once more into the jaws of the well-known wolf of poverty, would not have the courage upon his return to Sobrante to ask Dolores to share his poverty with him; should the revolution fail, Ricardo Ruey would be an outcast, a hunted man with a price on his head, and in no position to care for his sister, even should he survive long enough to know he had a sister. She would be alone in the world if he, John Stuart Webster, failed her now—more than ever she needed a man's strength and affection to help her navigate the tide-rips of life, for life to a woman, alone and unprotected and dependent upon her labor for the bread she must eat, must contain, at best, a full measure of terror and despair and loneliness. He pictured her through a grim processional of years of skimping and pety sacrifices—and all because he, John Stuart Webster, had hesitated to lend a dreamer and an idealist a paltry $40,000 without security.

No, there was no alternative. If his friendship for Billy was worth a sou, it was worth $40,000; if his silent, unrequited love for Dolores Ruey was worthy of her, no sacrifice on his part could be too great, provided it guaranteed her happiness.

"Ruined again," he sighed. "This is only another of those numerous occasions when the tail goes with the hide. How soon do you want the money?"

Ricardo Luiz Ruey leaned forward and gazed very earnestly at John Stuart Webster. "Do you really trust me that much, my friend?" he asked feelingly. "Remember, I am asking you for $40,000 on faith."

"Old sport," John Stuart Webster answered, "you went overboard in Buenaventura harbor and took a chance among those big, liver-colored, hammer-headed sharks. And you did that because you had a cause you thought worth dying for. I never knew a man who had a cause that was worth dying for who would even espouse a cause worth swindling for. You win—only I want you to understand one thing, Ricardo: I'm not doing this for the sake of saving that mining concession the Sarros government gave my friend, Geary. I'm above doing a thing like this for money—for myself. It seems to me I must do it to guarantee the happiness of two people I love: My friend, Geary, and the girl he's going to marry. I reject your promissory note and your promise of a deed of gift for that concession, and accept only your gratitude. There are no strings to this loan, because it isn't a loan at all. It's a bet. If you lose, I'll help you get out of the country and absolve you of any indebtedness to me. However, if you should win, I know you'll reimburse me from the national treasury."

"And you do not desire a bonus?"

"Nothing that will cost the citizens of this country one penny of their heritage. I'm going to bet this money—bet it, understand, not loan it. However, if you want to be a sport and honor me a little favor in return, you can."

"Fire away."

"After I give you this money, I don't want the doctor and the colonel to kiss me to show how grateful they are."

"You wonderful fellow! Jack Webster, if I had a sister I should want her to marry you."

"Show how little you'd think of your sister—staking her to a sentimental jackass. Shall I cable the money to New Orleans in the morning?"

"That will do very nicely."

"To whom shall I cable the money?"

"Send it to the Picayune National bank of New Orleans, with instructions to credit account No. 296, J. R. C., trustee. In this little game we are playing, my friend, it is safer to deal in numbers and initials rather than names. The local cable office leaks quite regularly."

"Very well, Ricardo, I'll attend to it first thing in the morning. Go to it and win, or there'll be several new faces whining around the devil, not the least of which will be mine. When you charge, remember you're charging for my $40,000—and go through with it. I worked rather hard for that $40,000, and if I must lose it, I do not want to do it in a half-hearted fight. Give me, at least, a bloody run for my money. I'll have a reserved seat somewhere watching the game."

"If you'll take my advice, you'll go aboard La Estrellita and stay there until the issue is decided. When the first gun is fired, it signals the open season on mining engineers who butt in on affairs of state."

"What! And me with a healthy bet down on the result! I hope I'm a better sport than that."

"You're incorrigible. Be careful, then, and don't get yourself potted by a stray bullet."

CASTORIA

Fletcher's Castoria is strictly a remedy for Infants and Children. Foods are specially prepared for babies. A baby's milk is even more essential for Baby. Remedies primarily prepared for grown-ups are not interchangeable. It was the need of a remedy for the common ailments of Infants and Children that brought Castoria before the public after years of research, and no claim has been made for it that its use for over 30 years has not proven.

What is CASTORIA?

Castoria is a harmless substitute for Castor Oil, Paregoric, Drops and Soothing Syrups. It is pleasant. It contains neither Opium, Morphine nor other narcotic substance. Its age is its guarantee. For more than thirty years it has been in constant use for the relief of Constipation, Flatulency, Wind Colic and Diarrhoea; allaying Feverishness arising therefrom, and by regulating the Stomach and Bowels, aids the assimilation of Food; giving healthy and natural sleep. CHAUNCEY DEPEW.

American Politician Who Was Famed as a Wit.

As legendary as Steve Brodie or Vox Populi, the famed Chauncey M. Depew lives on. As easy to answer the historic question, Who struck Billy Patterson? as to define Chauncey M. Depew. A Depew story is as famed as a Lincoln story, and yet Mr. Depew lives in the flesh and is about to celebrate another birthday.

Born on April 23, 1834, Chauncey Depew attained eighty-eight years on April 23, 1922.

"A man might be a bore to his audience and himself all his life-time and yet never reach the presidential chair," said Mr. Depew the other day in explaining why he had never taken up residence in the White House.

Earnest, ruddy, bright-eyed, he faced an interviewer recently and tried to explain why he looked so much like a man of 68 instead of 88.

"God has been good to me," he said, smiling and serious.

Himself a public speaker for 65 years and a United States senator for twelve years, Mr. Depew issued a warning against humor in public speeches. Humor almost killed Garfield's chances for the presidency and certainly it eliminated himself from the roll of presidential possibilities.

"There is danger in the joke and the story for the public man who wishes to rise in the estimation of the people as a statesman," he said.

Perhaps that was a subtly witty remark, for few men have been more honored by their fellow-countrymen or for so long a period.

In 1858, when 24 years of age, he was elected a delegate to the Republican state convention. Three years later he was in the States Assembly of New York. During the Civil War he was Secretary of State for New York. Many times he was delegate to national conventions. Once he was candidate for the presidential nomination.

"But you did not eliminate humor from your public career," said the interviewer.

"But I am not a public man," protested Mr. Depew originally and almost seriously. "My compunctions as a public speaker have been far greater than the attainment of any office."

That is to say, he preferred a good opinion by an audience to elections by the voters. Small wonder that for the thirty-first successive time he has been given a birthday dinner by the Montauk Club of Brooklyn. On these occasions he always makes a speech and all without notes.

"Humor must be spontaneous," he said. Even his book of memoirs, published this year and going back eighty years, was written without reference to any scrapbook or diary.

Eighty-eight years young, may Chauncey M. Depew yet delight many new audiences with his polished eloquence and shining wit before his name becomes no more than a brand name with which to improve the flavor of a flat joke.

LORD SHAUGHNESSY.

His Last Exploit Was to Kick Beatty Upstairs.

With the story of Lord Shaughnessy, the Financier and Rothschild of London's oldest financial daily, commences a series of articles on "Men of Mark in Business." In thus inaugurating its series the journal pays a tacit compliment to Canada. However, Lord Shaughnessy is interesting enough to justify any such compliment.

Sir William Van Horne used to say that the greatest thing he ever did for the C.P.R. was to put Shaughnessy into it. The financier recounts with evident surprise that the future "T. G." Sir Thomas, the chief and the baron—to use only a few of his names—was born in Milwaukee, the son of a poor Irish emigrant.

"It was the proudest moment of my life," he said, "when I carried my first week's wages home to my mother." It was to his mother that he sent his first telegram, stating that he had been knighted, and it was for her birthplace in Ireland that he named the Prince of Wales' car "Killarney."

At the age of fifteen Thomas went to work for a railway. At 26 he was general purchasing agent under Van Horne. On joining the C. P. R., his chief made a special trip to Milwaukee to get the future chairman of the board of directors to come along as purchasing agent of the newly-completed line.

Succeeding Van Horne, President Shaughnessy used all the economical arts of the purchasing agent in putting through enormous extensions to plant and equipment. He worked hard and inspired others to work hard. Always he kept out of the limelight as much as George Ham would let him.

Baron Shaughnessy is sensitive, returning and shy, but that is not to say that he cannot be aggressive enough in asserting and enforcing his own views when his mind is made up. He likes honors but not applause, and even when he took his seat in the House of Lords, contrived to leave for his business desk in a few minutes. First of all, he loves his home and his friends. Then comes his love for the railway, which, to him, means transportation and development for Canada.

"Lord Shaughnessy is ranked among the millionaires of Canada, but money has never been his god," says the Financier. "His efforts have been made, primarily, with the desire to develop the railway under his control, but also with a sincere and honest intention to benefit Canada as a whole, and how well he has achieved both desires is engraved in imperishable letters in the history of the Dominion and of the British Empire."

Lord Shaughnessy's way of retiring evidently appeals to the Financier. Having selected his man for the presidency, he moved his own personal belongings into his successor's modest office, and that compelled E. W. Beatty to move into the more pretentious offices, which Baron Shaughnessy, K.C.V.O., of Montreal, Canada, and Ashford, County Limerick, had lately occupied. Thus was "Eddie" Beatty kicked upstairs.

YOUTHFUL ANCIENT.

Cuts Capers on Ice at the Age of Eighty-Two.

Let us introduce Commodore Marcus Aurelius Hitchcock, of Point Edward. For eighty-two years he has been snuffing the invigorating breezes that blow down Lake Huron. For sixty-nine years of that time he divided his career between the callings of fisherman and yachtsman, in both of which he is a past master. He has caught in his nets, during his lifetime, a million dollars' worth of herring and whitefish. He holds the medal for life-saving. But, best of all, though four-score, he is full of the old-time energy that won him in his early days the rough and tumble championship of the Port Sarnia district, and to-day he has health and vigor that no money could buy.

Mr. Hitchcock's chief claim to fame is that he is one of the best performers on ice skates that the district can boast. In the old days, at Belle Isle, Detroit, policemen lined up the crowds on both sides of the river skating course, in order that all might view his backward jump on skates, taken at full speed and culminating in three jumps before coming to a stand. He does not attempt that famous leap nowadays, but every year he dons the blades and astonishes the onlookers by devoting himself to the less difficult, but no less artistic figure skating which also made a name for him in his younger days.

Several weeks ago the commodore delighted a crowd in St. Andrew's Arena, Sarnia, by giving an exhibition of figure skating, which, for a man of his years, was truly marvelous. Quick as a flash, he would carve his initials, or run words like "Dog" on the ice, without taking his feet from the smooth surface. His performance would have been decidedly creditable for a youth of twenty. To finish up the program, he sketched, with his facile skates, the figure of a life-like fish.

The commodore is one of the veteran fishermen of the Great Lakes. He recalls that in the old days sturgeon were very plentiful and that it was no uncommon thing to catch 100 or 200 of them every night, each weighing from 50 to 175 pounds. At that time sturgeon had no market like they have to-day, and were not considered a dainty edible. The heavy catch netted him nothing, unless an occasional dime from an Indian would lure away a 100-pounder for that price. The commodore is statistically inclined and estimates that during his fishing career he netted about $80,000 pounds of the sturgeon species.

Whenever he speaks of his fishing days, Mr. Hitchcock always refers to the faithful horse, which, for thirty-seven years, helped him haul up his boats from the water. The animal was born and died in the same stall at Point Edward, and, in its own equine way, created a record of service similar to its owner's.

Mr. Hitchcock would devote more time to the sport of skating except that his wife fears he might fall and suffer a fracture, which would prevent him from going to his work as a fisherman, in which he still daily engages.

HOW THE POPE LIVES.

Head of Roman Catholic Church Is Powerful But Lonely.

The most splendid and most lonely man in Europe, surrounded by ultra-regal magnificence, yet without the comforts of a cottage home, ministered to by a vast and brilliant army of attendants, and yet denied the solace of an intimate friendship.

Such is the Pope of Rome.

His palace of the Vatican is a small "roofed in city." Its rooms number more than eleven thousand! It boasts more than two hundred staircases, with halls and chapels, galleries and corridors almost beyond the counting; and within its walls is a beautiful garden with twenty courtyards.

His personal retinue numbers twelve hundred attendants, from chamberlains, house-prelates, and secretaries, to valets and doorkeepers. He has an armed guard of five corps, of one of which every member is of noble birth. The objects of art which adorn his palace are valued at $20,000,000; and his "household expenses" exceed $5,000 a-day.

Such, in brief words, is the magnificence of the supreme head of the Roman Catholic Church, whose "subjects" number one-sixth of the entire population of the earth, and nearly half of the world's Christians.

And what is the ordinary daily life of this man of splendor and magnificent isolation?

Every morning at six o'clock his principal valet enters his bedroom, often to find that his holiness is already up and dressed. His bedroom, though it has hangings of gold, is almost as plainly furnished as that of a monk, for it contains nothing but a bed and a praying-desk.

Mass follows quickly—usually in a small oratory adjoining his sleeping-room—in the presence of a few attendants only. And this celebration over, his holiness eats a breakfast of Spartan simplicity—generally a cup of coffee with a roll and butter.

The day's work now begins with the arrival of bundles of letters and telegrams from all parts of the world, which are read to his holiness by his private secretaries. Each receives his personal attention, and to each an answer is dictated. At ten o'clock he refreshes himself with a plate of soup and a crust of bread, and is now ready for the audience, the most exhausting part of the day's work.

These audiences, which present a scene of great impressiveness, are held in the throne-room, a chamber of almost indescribable magnificence, with its canopied throne covered with red velvet, and embellished with the papal arms. During the receptions the chamber and ante-rooms are crowded with cardinals and bishops, princes, nobles, and ambassadors, and distinguished foreigners from all parts of the world, a moving kaleidoscope of brilliant colors.

For the reception of less exalted callers, a smaller room, known as the Secret Consistory, is used. To all his visitors, from king to cottager, his holiness extends the same gentle, simple courtesy and welcome.

For visitors of royal rank the prescribed etiquette is to bend low and kiss the pope's extended hand — a form of homage which the ex-kaiser on one occasion, at least, ignored. Instead, he gave his holiness' hand a hearty shake and imprinted three resounding kisses on his cheek, to the horror of all who witnessed this hearty familiarity. For persons of lower degree, the prescribed custom is to kiss the pope's slipper.

The audiences over, his holiness has at last time to take a little recreation. In winter this takes the form of walking exercise in the picture gallery, the walls of which are covered with the finest specimens of Italian art. In summer, or whenever the weather is suitable, he strolls or drives in the Vatican gardens, whose avenues and paths stretch for miles through a paradise of flowers and trees.

Then follows dinner at 2.30 — a frugal meal, consisting usually of soup, poultry or fish, bread, fruit, and a little wine, partaken of in a room of extreme simplicity. Dinner is followed by a well-earned siesta in an adjoining room. After attending vespers with a few members of his household, the pope has the rest of the day free for such recreation as he fancies—either among the 150,000 books in his library, in the company of friends, over a game of chess, or a siesta in his gardens.

Such is the simple almost Spartan life of the pontiff, amid such pomp and splendor as no temporal sovereign knows.

Births and Deaths In England.

While the death rate in England and Wales during 1921 was the lowest on record for any country as a whole, the birth rate was, except for the war years, 1915-1919, the smallest recorded for the whole country. The figures were 12.1 and 22.4 respectively. In the 96 great towns, including London, the figures were: Birth rate, 23.5; death rate, 12.3; and deaths of infants under one year per 1,000 births, 87.

U. S. Farm Implements.

During 1920 the United States manufactured farm implements to the value of $537,000,000; gas tractors accounted for a third of the total 203,000 of them, valued at $193,000,000.

GEN. FENG.

Chinese Leader Who Belongs to the Christian Religion.

Gen. Feng, right hand man of Gen. Wu, master of China, since the defeat of Gen. Chang in April, is a Christian and very thorough-going. He prohibits opium, gambling, liquor, immorality and profanity; he encourages athletics, industry, praying and singing. His career is something of a romance, for he is still a young man and his rise has been phenomenal.

Feng Yu Hsiang enlisted as a private in the Imperial Army at the age of 16, and was at once sent to Peking where the Boxer troubles were on. His earliest encounter with Christianity was with a missionary who preached on the street about turning the other cheek and giving the cloak to who refused to give up his table then Feng grabbed it. This disgusted the young soldier. Then he was in the courtyard of a mission house when Mary Morrill, a Christian teacher, offered her life to the Boxer mob if they would spare her fellow-missionaries. He also saw these missionary families burned to death. This impressed him.

Shortly after he won his commission and had two dangerous illnesses in hospital. On both occasions the Christian doctor refused payment, merely saying, "remember that there is a God in heaven Who loves you." Later he heard Dr. John R. Mott speak and decided to study the Bible. His change of faith followed. In the revolution of 1912 he was promoted from major to brigadier-general in the federal or northern army and demonstrated his Christianity by giving five dollars to every soldier of an army which he captured, sending them home. This action made him famous.

Since 1912, he has been military governor of 8,000,000 people of Hunan province and in his army has enforced a Christian standard of living rigorously, although using methods of persuasion alone in making Christians of people. His army camps are models of cleanliness, discipline and happiness, according to the Canadian Presbyterian missionaries, Rev. J. Goforth and Mrs. Goforth, who conducted a mission for his officers three years ago.

Gen. Feng is over six feet tall, and every inch a general," writes Mrs. Goforth, "yet without a trace of the bombast so often seen in the leather-class Chinese. He has the welfare of his soldiers, both body and soul, at heart. The officers, including himself, dress in the plainest gray cotton. There is an industrial school for the soldiers' wives; also for the men who are nearing the age limit of the army and will soon need a trade."

Mrs. Goforth describes a meeting at which Gen. Feng broke down and wept in the presence of his officers, while trying to pray for the welfare of his beloved country. It was a most affecting and unusual scene among a stolid race, but when he rose to go every man leaped to his feet. Discipline had not slackened at all. In fact, his division has long been famed for its pipe-clay and ceremonial, also for efficiency in the handling of modern arms.

In 1918, when there was trouble with Japan a-brewing, Feng was the man spoken of to be sent to save Shantung. On the other hand, he steadfastly refuses to take aggressive measures against the Southern President, Sun Yat Sen, hating civil war too much for that. In the fighting this year his command is credited in the cables with having played a decisive part.

Feng is now forty years of age, of strikingly handsome appearance and magnetic personality, with a reputation second to none in and out of the army. A keen student and well-educated although denied the privileges of school in his youth by the poverty of his father, an officer in the old army, he knows history and military science well.

Gen. Wu Pei Fu, who was commander-in-chief in the campaign which repulsed Gen. Chang Tso Lin of Manchuria in April, has long been Gen. Feng's greatest friend. He commanded the division of which Feng's brigade was a part in the 1912 fighting. He is not a Christian, but admitted recently, "I want a praying army, like Cromwell's." Wu and Feng are great patriots, according to the missionaries, and under them China might be re-united without bloodshed.

A Nice Family.

Hughes: "Yes, old Goodman's three boys are a bad lot. Two of them at least ought to be in jail."

Brown: "Some redeeming quality about the third one, eh?"

"Yes, he's already been there."

Result of a Dream.

That the Canadian war memorial to be erected in France by Walter S. Allward, the Toronto sculptor, was the result of a dream is the statement of an article by Anne Anderson Perry in the International Studio. Mr. Allward, as his friends know, felt the significance of the great war acutely, and it is really no surprise to those who know him best that his feeling should at length have found expression in the magnificent design for the Canadian memorial, which is to cost one million dollars and require five years to construct. Mrs. Perry quotes Mr. Allward as giving the following account of the origin of the idea:

"When things were at their blackest in France during the war, I went to sleep one night after dwelling on all the muck and misery over there. My spirit was like a thing tormented, so I dreamed. In my dream I was on a great battlefield. I saw our men going up in thousands and being mowed down by the sickles of death, regiment after regiment, division after division. Suffering beyond endurance at the sight, I turned my eyes and found myself looking down an avenue of poplars. Suddenly through this avenue I saw thousands marching to the aid of our armies. They were the dead. They rose in masses, filed silently by, and entered the fight to aid the living. So vivid was this impression that when I awoke it stayed with me for months. Without the dead we were helpless. So I have tried to show, in this monument to Canada's fallen, what we owed them, and will forever owe them."

Woman's Rights In Finland.

Woman in Finland enjoys almost equal rights with the man. In school she has, in the common instruction with the male youth, opportunity to contend with them and to acquire the same knowledge. After completing the school education almost all vocations are open to her, and she is found in all branches of industry, but especially in business houses, in public offices, and similar institutions. She can not occupy the office of Minister, however, and some of the higher posts. Practically, woman is the equal of man. She has the right of suffrage and she herself is eligible to all elective offices. The Finnish Diet actually counts twenty female deputies among its members.

New Paradise of the Rockies

JASPER PARK LODGE IS A REAL HOME AMONG THE MOUNTAINS

Jasper Park, embracing 4,400 square miles of the most magnificent virgin mountain scenery in the world, has long been known to the sportsman, alpinist and tourist, but this summer it calls to holiday seekers with a new voice. It now offers ideal accommodation in Jasper Lodge, the first of a series of Alpine chalets to be built in the Jasper and Mount Robson districts, and was formally opened to the public on June 15th.

The lodge is beautifully situated among the singing pines and cedars on the shore of Lac Beauvert, while towering in solemn grandeur on all sides rise the rugged snowy domes, sometimes glowing with opals in the shimmering sunlight and sometimes lost amid the low-hanging clouds. It consists of a group of log rustic buildings blending with the rugged surroundings. A spacious lounge building with an ample stone fireplace, an airy dining-room, a dance pavilion and a number of separate sleeping cabins, each containing four bedrooms and a sitting-room, are electric-lighted and fittingly furnished throughout.

Here in the Northern Canadian Rockies the tourist will find all that makes a worth-while holiday. The joy of adventure in exploring and mountain-climbing, boating on Lac Beauvert, fishing in the wild mountain torrents, riding through the valleys with the fresh mountain breezes in your face, dancing with the guardian purple mountains keeping watch—all offer a most interesting variety of recreation. The best of accommodation has associated with it congenial companionship and scenery rivalling even that of the Swiss Alps.

These lodges not only tend to make Jasper Park one of the great travel centres of the Dominion thereby increasing the revenues of our Canadian National Railways, but also add their share toward ultimately placing Canada on the map as one of the outstanding meccas of the world traveller.

WELCOME, WINTRY WINDS?

What did you do with your summer's dough?
It's gone; and you hate to tell.
Soon we'll have both hail and snow,
It sure would make one yell.
But! we should worry! let it come,
The wintry winds we'll greet,
For we were shod at the Hospital
And we shall have dry feet.
Hog! Dog! nor devil, do we fear,
For our understanding's good;
Our sox are dry, our feet are glad,
We did as wise fool's should.
